

Protestatarii au marșaluit pentru a doua oară în trei zile împotriva taxei pe care ei cred că este o încercare de a restrânge libertățile.

Tens of thousands of protesters have marched in Budapest against a plan by the Hungarian government to tax internet use from 2015.

Tuesday's rally, the second in three days, also showed growing discontent among mostly younger citizens against Prime Minister Viktor Orban's policies centralising power and increasing the role of the state to the detriment of private enterprise.

The government has said that it is just trying to reduce the country's debt, but many Hungarians see it as Protest speakers outside the Ministry of Economy called on Orban to withdraw the plan to force internet

Initially, the tax was set to be 150 forints ($0.62) per gigabyte of internet traffic, but Orban's ruling party,

The government, which announced the proposal last week before any consultations with industry groups

Protesters vowed to continue the rallies, which were also held in several other Hungarian cities and at s

 sursa -

<http://www.aljazeera.com/news/europe/2014/10/protests-held-hungary-against-internet-tax-2014102823593610819.html>